LITTER OF BORN WITH WINGS!

By DEBBIE FANATIA

MARYSVILLE, Kan. — Joe Carbunckle raised pigs all his life and thought he'd seen it all, but the litter born to one of his sows shocked even him as each pig emerged with a set of wings.

His first thought was all the things his wife had promised him when pigs fly, but that was quickly replaced by the realization of what he really had in his barn.

"The sow had been acting strangn before they were born, and the vet thinks she was somehow impregnated by one of the roosters," said Carbunckle. "She hung real tight with one of them.

"It was a mess when they started to really fly. It was a pretty sight watching a 40-pound pig smash into the rafters. When they drop, it's not graceful. It was a while before they got the hang of it; fortunately I only lost one barn cat.

"Well, and there's that cow that got whacked on the head while she was just standing there chewing her cud. Bill says she'll never be right again."

"They were the cutest little things you ever saw," said Carbunckle's wife Seerai. "They'd jump around and flap their wings like little fat chicks. They'd land with a thump and squeal and fly off after each other. They were just adorable."

Mrs. Carbunckle modified doll clothes to fit them and as each distinct pig personality emerged, she taught them tricks. The neighbors suggested that teaching them to sit and beg were normal tricks and the pigs deserved better. "One of my friends said it's no great trick for a pig to beg."

As the piglets grew and their skills at flight became more honed, Seerai thought they looked like little cherubs, and began dressing them in filmy robes.

Eventually she and Joe wrote a Christmas play starring the pigs. "They were the angels in the nativity, but they were a little disruptive. One of them kept suddenly flying up to catch bugs.

"But when the local high school used them as the flying monkeys in their production of The Wizard of Oz, they did real good. It just shows how versatile these little guys are. From cherubs to evil monkeys."

The Carbunckles split the pigs into groups, eventually. Some are still actors, but some have been rented out to delivery companies. They frequent-

BUG-LOVING ACTIVISTS VOW TO BAN WINDSHIELDS

BUG-LOVING protesters are afraid that if we don't ban windshields, flying insects could become extinct.

By DEBBIE FRAZITA

SAN DIEGO, Calif. — Imagine driving down the highway in summer, the air thick with the smell of flowers, the wind blowing your hair from your face, the heat from the sun like a soft blanket fresh out of the dryer on your shoulders.

Maybe you're driving through Minnesota, where the mosquitoes are as big as bats, or in Florida where millions of love bugs travel in pairs.

You're on a two-lane road going 80 m.p.h. and suddenly . . . SPLAT, a swarm of bugs collide with your forehead, clog up your eyes, and those comfortably warm shoulders become bloody bug graveyards — because your vehicle doesn't have a windshield.

If insect-rights activists get their way, that will be the scene all over the United States.

The activists are lobbying to have windshields, goggles, helmet face shields and any other forms of bodily protection on vehicles deemed illegal.

"Insects are disappearing just like the dodo bird," James Hickler, spokesman for Insect Rights Keepers (IRK) postulated to Weekly World News. "We drop poison from helicopters on insects and ourselves just to be rid of them.

"Our organization thinks it's an outrage for civilized people to insert huge slabs of murderous glass, plastic or metal on something traveling fast enough to kill thousands of insects in a few minutes just for convenience's sake. Bugs are a fact of life and have just as much right to the highways and our homes as we do."

If protective shields are outlawed on vehicles, IRK will recommend padded

I'LL FATTEN UP THAT SKINNY GAL!

DEAR EDITOR, Just look at your cover for May 30, 2006 — the fattest man I've ever seen and the skinniest lady together, and happily married!

Now, don't get me wrong, I'm sure she's a lovely doll, but I'm from the South, and down here, guys like a girl with curves. Something to hold on to, you know? So, if I could, I'd like to help that tiny toothpick. Receive with one of my favorite recipes for Country Fried Steak with Extra Gravy:

1 lb. round steak, 2 tbsp. bacon grease, ½ cup flour, 2 tbsp. flour, ½ tsp. salt, 2 cups whole milk, ¼ tsp. pepper.

Mix flour and salt in large each side until golden. Remove and let steaks crisp.

Lower heat and add flour to pan drippings. Slowly add milk, stir. Let cook until thick. Add pepper to taste.

Lastly (and tastily) enjoy your deep-fried Southern specialty — and get you some curves, girl!

Dear Editor, Supermarket [illegible] (May 23, 2006) is a reality where I live. I can't go to the grocery store without someone threatening me with a ripe cantaloupe or brick of coffee. It's insane and I'm glad way too seriously. These ladies here stand in front of the reduced-fat cookies and compare labels for 20 minutes at a time, all the while blocking the aisle so NO ONE else can get through.

So I tell them, "Just pick a cookie. Really. If you're going to eat cookies, you can't be that concerned with healthiness anyway." And then I get smacked in the head with a box of Snackwells.

Why do they get so mad?

Dear Editor, Why Internet

suits to protect both driver and bug, while also advocating speed limits no greater than 25 m.p.h.

"We could save an astronomical number of insects if we'd just adopt these small measures," said Mickles. "Besides, it wouldn't kill us to slow down and enjoy the ride. I've never understood why people are in such a great big hurry to get to work or buy groceries."

BCK also plans to lobby for legislation aimed at protecting insects' natural habitat by preventing people from mowing their lawns or killing vegetation except as necessary to keep windows unobstructed or to create a firebreak around the property. They'd also like to make it illegal to plant anything non-native.

When asked what would happen to the nursery growers, Mickles responded, "Who cares! They're a bunch of murderous thieves who patent weakened mutations that won't live without pesticides, fertilizers and rampant consumerism.

"Let 'em starve. Them and the golf course contractors who keep the pesticide companies in business."

BCK claims they've given people ample time to mend their ways before demanding even the most commonplace things like flyswatters be declared illegal.

"People laughed at us during our 'Kill the Roses, Not the Beetles' campaign. Kids go out and trap beetles in jars and clamp the lid on them just to see the iridescent colors. Or listen to them crunch under their shoes," Mickles said with a grimace. "How would you like it if somebody lured your kid into a swimming pool and then closed the retractable cover? Well, beetles and other insects are somebody's kids too. I wish people would teach their own kids that."

Laws preventing vehicular insect slaughter will be addressed in the next legislative session.

Death-row prisoners write and star in musical comedy

By MARK MILLER

McALESTER, Okla. — Though no doubt well-deserved, the life of America's approximately 3,500 death-row prison inmates is extremely bleak. They spend the majority of their day in an 8x6-foot windowless cell containing a bed of stainless steel that is bolted to the floor.

Even the bed springs are often removed, as the guards have found that the prisoners can make weapons from them. The only other furnishings are a wall locker, a sink and a toilet.

Death row prisoner privileges are numbered, literally. Each week, they are limited to three showers, five attorney visits and two personal visits — but not conjugal.

Each prisoner spends an average of 17 long, lonely years waiting on death row before their execution date finally arrives.

Considering this Spartan, joyless, and at times dangerous existence, it is not surprising that death row pent-up thoughts, feelings and energies. A group of them at the Oklahoma State Penitentiary has done just that — they've written and starred in their own, original musical comedy, which they've already performed to enthusiastic response for the other prisoners and select civic groups.

"We patterned it after the Broadway musical Oklahoma, but we call our version Deathtrishima," reveals director Jimmy Joe Jimson, or as he's better known in the penitentiary, inmate #99999. "It's lyrics that pertain to the prisoners' concerns, hopes and dreams.

"The overall mood is dark, but not without humor."

One of the songs is sung to the tune of "Oh, What a Beautiful Mornin'."

A phone call for me came this mornin'
A phone call for me came today
The governor's calling with news about me
And it looks like they're turnin' me loose here at three
Oh, what a beautiful pardon
Best news I've gotten in years
Cancel my lethal injection
Now I'll have steak, sex and beers

One of the musical's most deeply affecting numbers comes toward the end, on the prisoner's execution day, as he tearfully addresses the warden, to the tune of "The Surrey With the Fringe on Top":

Strap me down in the chair, Warden Murray
This is the day I'm to die, so please hurry
When you take me out of my jail cell with a priest and cop
Throw that switch and my body will shudder
Nosey inmates'll peek through their jail cells and my eyes will pop
When I fry in that recliner with the voltage on top

Reviewed in the penitentiary newspaper by Inmate #99751102, the musical was described as "Raw, real and true to the lonely, hopeless and brutal life of the death row inmate — yet sprinkled with laughs, music, and fun! Two shivs up!" Perhaps the musical's most popular number is its title song, sung to the tune of "Oklahoma":

In-n-n-n-n the shower, where the inmates help to get me washed
And it's such a pain when Big Don Lane
Blithely sits upon me till I'm squashed
In-n-n-n-n the shower, every night six cellmates block my way
Telling me they hope, I drop the soap.
When I do, they smile and shout "Hooray!"

The musical is so popular that the warden has extended

Monk kicked out of monastery for talking in his sleep

By DAVID TILSEY

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. – A Trappist monk was permanently removed from a Fayetteville County monastery after repeated episodes of talking in his sleep.

Father Matthew Silistone, a seven-year disciple of the monastic family following Christ according to the Rule of St. Benedict, had threatened the peaceful order of the monks for months until one long night finally broke the camel's back.

Exclusive details gathered by a crack team of Weekly World News reporters reveal that Father Silistone began yelling incessantly, "I want to go to Disney World now! C'mon, let's all go to Disney World! It's a Small World After All . . . It's a Small World After All . . .!"

Between intermittent periods of silence, the monk would also carry on conversations with an apparent dream companion, debating which was the greatest Disney film, Fantasia or Sleeping Beauty. The bizarre rant lasted for nearly six hours, and it was then that the Order made its fateful decision.

The removal of Father Silistone has cause quite an uproar throughout this Arkansas town. "A centuries-old order devoted to Christ throws out a family member just because he talks in his sleep?" said local deli owner Dan "Dewey" Wainwright. "They ought to be ashamed of themselves. It wasn't like the poor man was blurting out during the

CLONE TRASHES

DOPPELGANGERS of Hillary Clinton have been spotted misbehaving in all sorts of ways.

By CHAD [illegible] and MAURICE X. FITZ

WASHINGTON, D.C. – A Silver Spring housewife contacts the police with the complaint that former First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton stole her purse in an airport rest room. A bartender in Baltimore claims that the author of It Takes a Village collared him for a wild night in a motel. A Georgetown attorney is filing charges against the future Presidential wannabe on the grounds that she attacked and threatened to cripple him outside his law firm for working on behalf of Dick Cheney's former company Halliburton.

What's going on? Has the junior senator from New York popped her cork? Or is a dangerous Hillary look-alike roaming our streets?

"I don't think it's an impersonator," said political theorist and Georgetown Institute of Technology graduate Dr. Benton Heese. "I believe these are clones doing the dirty work. I happen to know — from colleagues who can't hold their Bud Lites — that Hillary's enemies in the GOP have funded a massive GIT effort to discredit her, to destroy her chances of winning the presidential election in [illegible]

I've personally seen priests go into confessional booths with microscope slides to scoop up sweet, salty tears of repentance.

"If nothing else, this might explain why Hillary Clinton and Martha Stewart seem so much alike when they get angry," Reese added. "They are made from the same bad-woman template."

Other active case files credit one or more Hillary clones with stealing cars, fronting Internet pornography, distributing poisoned Halloween candy and soliciting sex.

"We've known about the GIT program for quite some time," admitted a Hillary confidant. "We've found ourselves in the awkward position of having to pay people off to keep quiet, since no one believes that these are what we refer to as duplicate or 'bi-Hillaries'." The confidant grinned. "Oddly enough, some of the Hillary's wilder exploits have actually helped us with men in red states."

"I don't have an opinion about Hillary herself," Dr. Reese told us. "I contacted Weekly World itself. What happens when other nations get hold of the GOP's cloning abilities? They could create leaders who seem entirely reasonable or conciliatory when they speak in public, then go back to their situation rooms and plan world domination. For all we know that's happening now in places like the Middle East and China. I'm not even sure that 'one person.' Or Bigfoot. Or Brad Pitt, for that matter. How is it those guys seem to be everywhere, behaving one way and then another?"

Spokespeople for Senator Clinton had no comment, though an assistant to former President Bill Clinton said, "There may be some truth to this. Mr. Clinton left the office in a hurry today, searching for his wife. Someone said she was doing a lap

SPECIAL OPS CHEERLEADERS

They sabotage the home team!

BY MARK MILLER

MIAMI, Fla. — When most people think of mercenaries, they picture professional soldiers hired for service in a foreign army and motivated solely by a desire for financial gain. Recently, however, a new, insidious breed of mercenary has come to light — Special Operations Cheerleaders.

These young, stunning, highly trained and accomplished women travel the country, infiltrate professional cheerleading squads — and then proceed to turn the cheerleaders against their home team! In exchange for this highly specialized service, they are paid huge sums of money by any professional sports team interested in contracting their unique skills.

The mercenary cheerleaders are all graduates of an intensive two-year training program at SOC-HOP, the Special Operations Cheerleaders Herkies of Power, located just outside Santa Fe, N.M. Just to get accepted into this training program, the girls must be between the ages of 18 and 25, have a fashion model-quality appearance, superb athletic skills, a very high IQ, and, as one SOC-HOP insider puts it, "a strong desire and willingness to program, the girls receive daily expert training, not only in state-of-the-art cheerleading techniques, but also in psyops.

"They're traitors to the art form, if you ask me," complains National Cheerleading Ethics Association spokesperson Karen Jacobsen. "Recently, for example, one professional sports team had the worst record in their league, with 12 losses and only four wins. Of course, we can't blame the Special Operations Cheerleaders totally for the dismal record. After all, it was the team's decision to add

MAN KILLED BY HIS OWN

By MARK MILLER

MONTCLAIR, N.J. – A recent crime here had law enforcement officers and detectives scratching their heads in disbelief, even with the sworn testimony of an eyewitness: A man was killed by his own shadow.

"I'd never have believed it in a million years if I hadn't seen it with my own eyes," states Scott Medra, 36, who was walking to the tennis courts with his friend, Joe D'Angara, 37.

"The sun was at an angle where it made our shadows show up in front of us on the ground. Joe started stomping on his shadow, and was You're such a waste of space! Who needs you!?' Joe was always messin' with his shadow like that."

That's when things began getting strange. "Joe's shadow started slowly sliding from the sidewalk, up his legs, until it covered his entire body. The shadow turned darker and them to their squad. But what they did was inexcusable, unethical, and just plain mean."

One of the wronged cheerleaders agreed to speak with Weekly World News on condition of anonymity, so we'll simply refer to her as "Donna."

As Donna recalls it, "Most women who are as beautiful as super models we other girls kinda'd resent, plus they're usually pretty stuck up. But these Special Operations Cheerleaders somehow had the knack for seeming really down-to-earth and likeable. They became our best friends. But the weird part is we have absolutely no memory of any of the bad stuff that happened next. We only heard it from others. They must have put us in a trance or something."

What happened next was that the team's regular cheerleaders stopped talking to the players, stopped going out with them. They'd react sarcastically when they messed up during games and even incorporated slams to the guys within their actual cheers. One such cheer included the line, "Our team's a bunch of losers, filled with drunks and steroid users."

"After a few games, when serious damage had been done to team morale, the Special Ops girls didn't show up to a scheduled practice one day, and we never saw them again.

"But I know they're still out there somewhere, not leading cheers but leading jeers."

SWISS TO SELL CHEESE HOLES SEPARATELY!

By MARK MILLER

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND – For centuries, the Swiss have punched out the holes in their world-famous Swiss cheese and simply thrown away the punched-out pieces of cheese. In today's environmentally conscious business environment, though, that tradition is about to end. The Swiss have decided to have every punched-out piece of cheese sold and sold them as Genuine Swiss Cheese Holes – or, since the French word for "Swiss" is "Suisse," (pronounced "swees") Suisse Pieces.

"We're sure the public will quickly realize that our Suisse Pieces are just as convenient and useful as shredded or grated cheese," explained Compagnie Fromage de la Suisse spokesman Emil Duveller. "And our campaign slogan – 'They really hit the spot' – should attract plenty of attention."

Duveller said a massive advertising campaign will suggest a multitude of uses for the Suisse Pieces, including:

- Sprinkle them on salads, sandwiches and salads.
- Create fun designs on cheeseburgers.
- Bake [illegible] for babies.
- Metal heads on spoons, attaching them with toothpicks.
- Spell out messages of love with them on casseroles.

News of the Swiss cheese holes marketing campaign is inspiring other companies to consider selling previously discarded components. One Texas meat-processing company has formed an alliance with an international

MOVIE MAYHEM!

Pummeling popcorn hurts 37

By [redacted]

DAYTON, Ohio – In what is being described as the worst popcorn-related disaster in U.S. history, 37 innocent moviegoers were injured when an [redacted]-strength popcorn machine violently malfunctioned.

"It was horrible," sobbed Shelley Thistle, 14, who sustained minor injuries when an exploding kernel flew up her nostril, triggering a sinus attack. "People were running everywhere, screaming and dropping their hot dogs, pretzels and drinks."

Sam Watson, 79, a retired infantryman who fought in World War II, was startled by the commotion. "It was worse than storming the beach at Normandy," he said. "I dodged bullets on that fateful day in France, but not here. I sustained three direct hits, one unpopped kernel in the forehead and two in the chest. I'm lucky I made it out alive."

Lyle Hickman, owner of the Tasty Popcorn Supply Company, issued a statement denying any culpability. "I'm sure the fault doesn't lie with our Blaster Extreme Popcorn Machine, it's our top-of-the-line popper and it operated according to instructions."

A criminal complaint may soon be filed against theater manager Norville Belcher.

Initial reports from an investigation looking into what triggered the disaster show the machine was likely overloaded with oil and popcorn in an attempt to blast out more of the popular movie snack for the premiere of the final Star Wars movie.

Belcher, however, fervently denies the anticipated charges. "I doubt they'll find one kernel of evidence against me," he said.

MAN'S CHEST HAIR GROWS IN DESIGN OF DA VINCI'S LAST SUPPER!

By MARK MILLER

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas – The art world was stunned recently to discover a never-before-seen rendition of Leonardo da Vinci's classic painting, "The Last Supper," done in a truly unique medium – a man's chest hair!

As librarian Gabriel Grunfeld, 43, revealed on the local TV show, Good Morning, Corpus Christi, his chest hair has formed a minutely detailed version of the famed religious painting showing Jesus seated with his disciples at a long table, during dinner on the evening before he was to be betrayed by Judas.

"I noticed the image beginning to take shape when I was 18," recalls the staggeringly hairy Grunfeld. "It seemed to first, followed by Judas, Peter and John, and then Christ, Thomas, James Major and Philip – and only very recently were the last three disciples completed – Matthew, Thaddeus and Simon."

As to what caused this bizarre occurrence, Dr. Robert Kepberg, of the National Institute of Unexplained Phenomena, states, "On rare occasions, the mind-body connection may be so strong that the synaptic energy and imaging will actually translate from the mind to the body. A dream, a thought, even an image seen – any of these things can become physically imprinted, manifesting itself as a mole, birthmark, scar – or a design in chest hair."

I DON'T GIVE A $@%! ABOUT NEW STAR WARS FLICK!

This kind of recycled trash bores me to tears

I'M MADDER than a Wookiee with a busted [illegible] cellar at all this hoopla about the latest Star Wars movie!

Now, I know the world's nerds are gonna come after me with their torches, pitchforks and pocket protectors when they read this. But [illegible] it, folks: [illegible] picture is nothing but the [illegible] sequel to the prequel of a movie that was just a retread of those old Saturday matinee [illegible] like Buck Rogers to begin with!

All the stolen Star [illegible] Episode III: Revenge of the Sith [illegible] now we "get to find out" what [illegible] of young Darth Vader. Well, I [illegible] to spoil the [illegible] for the high-water [illegible] and coke-bottle-bottom-glasses crowd, but I already know the [illegible] — without wasting $9 on a movie ticket. Don't get me wrong, gang. Nobody's more nostalgic than yours truly. Why, I own the biggest collection of Civil War memorabilia of anyone I know.

But science fiction is supposed to be about the future, by jiminy — not the past.

The other lame "blockbuster" movies coming out this summer admit he ripped off those old-time serials. He says his idea was to create a nostalgic flick that harkened back to the good old days. That's why, if you take a look at the first Star Wars movie, you'll see spaceships "banking" just like old-fashioned World War II fighter planes.

For crying out loud, they've already made four Batman movies in the last few years — starring three different actors who all got so bored playing [illegible] role they swore off it.

The difference is this is another prequel and we find out what young Bruce Wayne does to get back at the world's criminals after his parents are murdered. Gee, I wonder how that will turn out?

PHYSICIST PROPOSES WITH NUCLEAR BOMB TEST

Now island chain spells fiancee's name across the South Pacific

By HANK KURSINGLIEBE

TANGATUFA, Moroan Archipelago — When U.S. Director of Nuclear Testing Charlie Hardtack decided to settle down with his longtime girlfriend — and chief physicist — Enola Jolly, he wanted to do more than merely 'pop' the question.

"I knew that I had to propose in a way that said 'this is forever,' " Hardtack explained. "I thought about a tattoo but that seemed ordinary. Skywriting was big but ephemeral. Then, in the middle of our preparations for the Union II nuclear test in the Moroa Islands, it occurred to me that weapons-grade Plutonium has a half-life of 24,000 years.

"I looked at those sugary sands, the palm trees, and the shimmering jade ocean, and I thought, 'It doesn't get any more romantic than this,' " Hardtack went on. "So, without her knowing it, I made some changes in the bomb's fusion tamper and Beryllium-Polonium core. Then . . . I waited."

The couple watched the detonation from the firing bunker on Tangatufa Island. At first it seemed as though Hardtack's efforts were for naught.

"Enola is a pretty focused lady. When the cloud went up in a heart-shape instead of the usual mushroom, she said nothing," intensity of 2.8 — the number of years we'd been dating — she still didn't get it.

"But later, in our survey plane 12,000 feet over the test site, my girl finally realized what was going on."

friend saw, written on the sea in mile-wide letters of demolished rock, sand and coral, the message: "Marry Me, Enola."

"Actually, it said 'Marry Me, Enola' because I had underestimated the yield by a few kilotons, but she got the picture," Hardtack said.

Enola immediately accepted the proposal.

"I saw straight into Charlie's soul that morning," she told

Charlie and Enola now wear matching engagement rings designed by Hardtack himself. The rings feature luminous green stones made of Moroa Island sand fused into glass by the detonation.

"When Charlie pulled the ring out, my heart started beating like crazy — and so did my Geiger counter," Enola recalled.

She and Charlie look forward to a long future together. As Charlie put it: "Our relationship is perfectly self-sustaining, and will produce — now that the test-

AUSTRALIA'S KANGAROO COURT HAS REAL KANGAROOS

By MINNIE FYLI

DARWIN, Australia – Many despotic countries have kangaroo courts – so-called because they leap to conclusions without facts to back them up. But only one country – Australia – has kangaroo courts with real kangaroos!

Danny Hunter, one of Aussie land's top law chiefs, said, "We have plenty of kangaroos in this country causing trouble, and it's our job to bring them to justice.

"Some kangaroos are just in the wrong place at the wrong time, or else they're provoked by stupid American tourists. In these cases, we let them go back into the wild, with a warning.

"But other kangaroos are malevolent and like to cause harm. These kangaroos we punish."

Common incidents with kangaroos include punching tourists, hopping on cars and stealing digital cameras and hiding them in their pouches.

"Kangaroos are responsible for 25 percent of the stolen digital cameras in our country," Hunter said. "Their arms are perfect for pushing buttons to take pictures. They love looking at themselves immediately afterwards. They're quite vain, actually.

"Their modus operandi is to punch a tourist in the head, grab the camera, drop it in their pouch and hop away. Then they join a pack of other kangaroos, and it's impossible

GIRL SINGS HER HEART OUT

Doctors call it cardio-cannonitis . . . it's extremely rare!

By MICHAEL ROSS

DOVER, Del. — It started out as an ordinary elementary school talent show, with fifth- and sixth-graders demonstrating their skills in ballet, as pianists and violinists, and as singers. One of the vocalists was 11-year-old Carol Chaser, who was singing selections from Fiddler.

"At first her performance was inspiring," said Mrs. Thistle, the Dover Municipal School music teacher. "She was all, 'Sun gets out here . . . footloose!' But when her costume began to sweat, I became concerned."

So did the school nurse, Miss Tina Chapel. "We were so proud of Carol," she told us. "When she finished her song the whole school applauded. Then she keeled. I assumed all the exertion made her lightheaded. I thought the redness was a juice box in her pocket or something."

What actually happened was that Carol had sung so loudly and passionately that her heart literally burst from her chest.

"I ran to the stage and saw through the arteries," Nurse Chapel said. "Poor Carol was trying to sing while we called 911. She was up to 'Holding Out for a Hero' when the paramedics arrived. They put her lower, beating heart on a cymbal so they carried her to the waiting ambulance. It gave them a nice deep beat as they rushed out."

At the hospital, surgeon Hans Klott put the girl's heart back in her chest.

"This condition, called cardio-cannonitis, is obviously extremely rare," said Dr. Klott. "But there have been instances when a person performs a physical activity so intense that the heart can just pop out, like a cannon. For example, when a romance ends people often say they have a broken heart. It is true. You can get so upset that you literally have out your heart."

As soon as they were allowed, many of the students and faculty visited the medical miracle in intensive care.

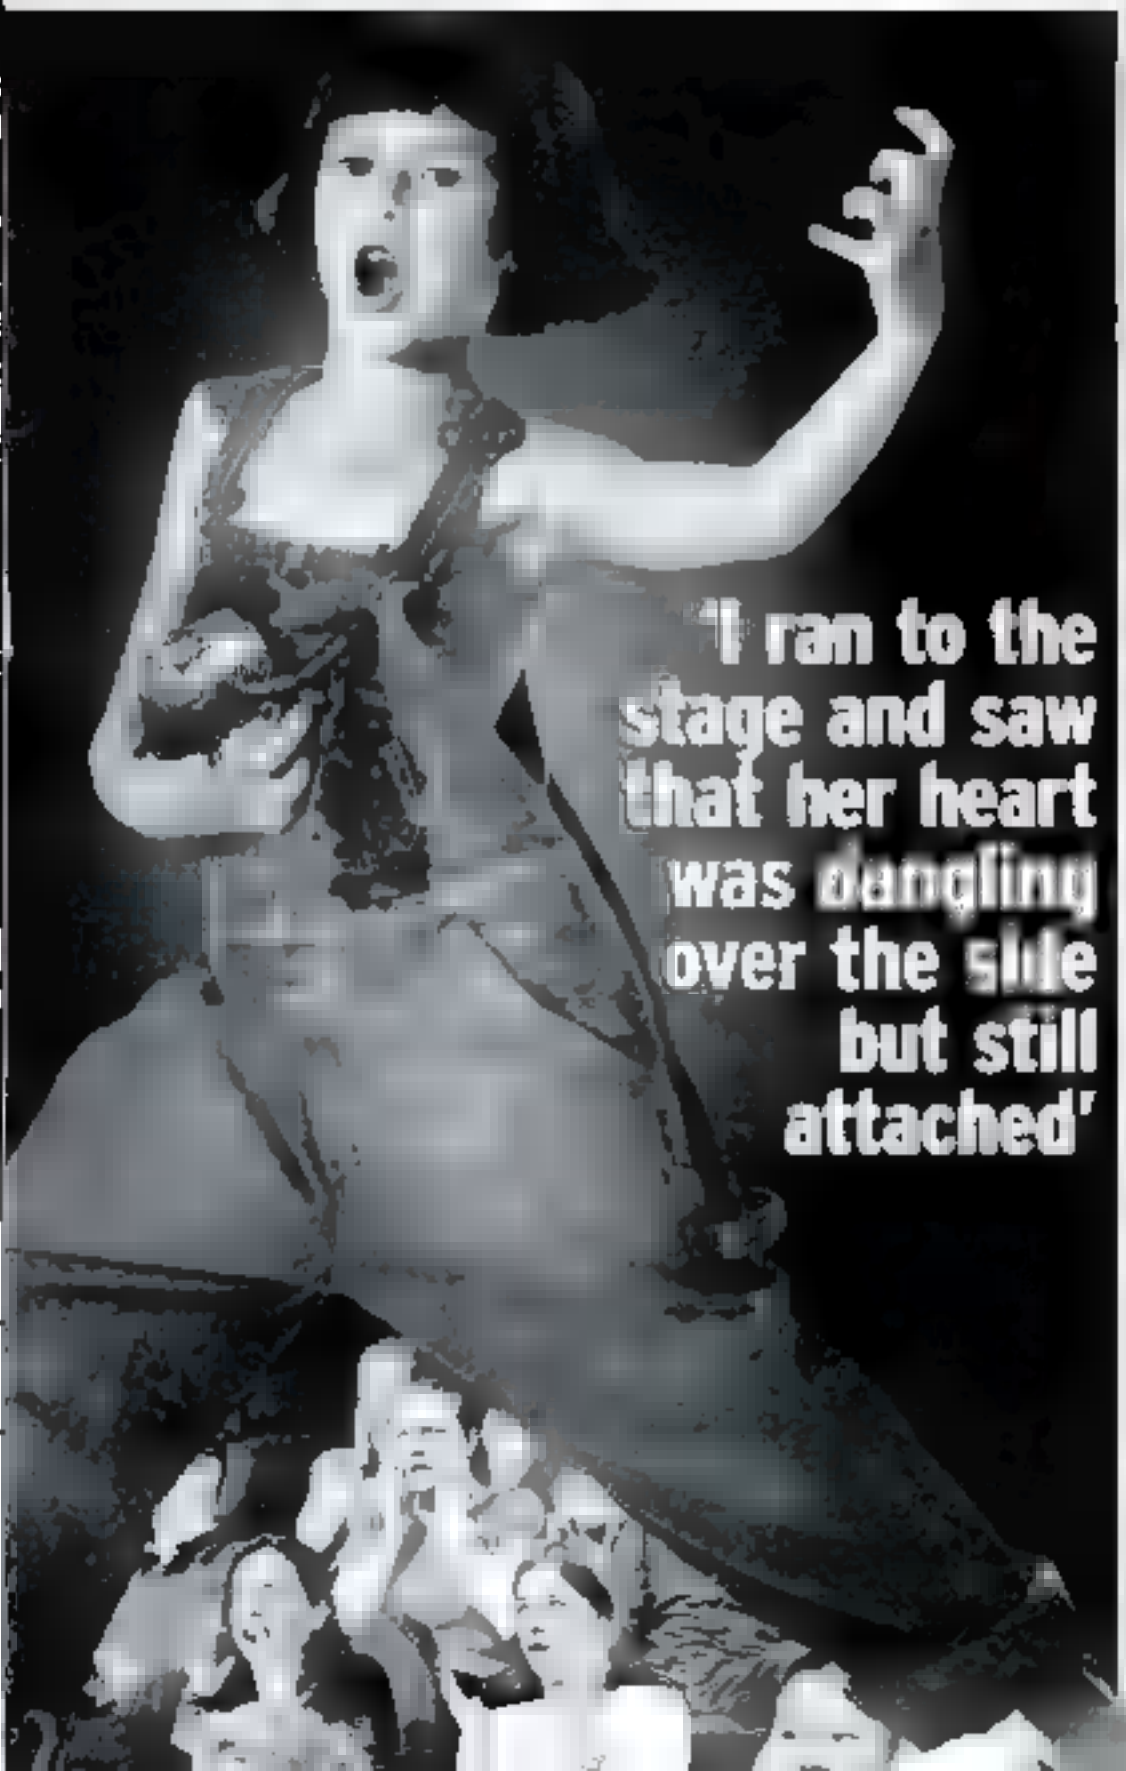
"It was tough to find a get well card that didn't have hearts on it," said one student. "We didn't think she'd want to see one for a long time."

Doctors at the accident are busy and her outlook is upbeat.

"I don't remember much except how breezy it suddenly felt in my chest," she said. "I guess I should have studied chamber music more — heart chamber music," smiled the plucky girl.

Because of this incident, the school board has asked Mrs. Thistle to add a musical safety class to the curriculum.

"I don't really expect anyone to blow a trumpet so hard that they lose their colon, but I guess it could happen," said the teacher.



GIRAFFE NABBED BY THE LONG NECK OF THE LAW!

By ANGEL FLEMING

GRANADA HILLS, Calif. – After dozens of complaints from upset neighbors, stunned California fish and game officers raided the San Fernando Valley home of Doris Bilby, 57, and carted off her beloved pet giraffe, Elsie.

"It's about time," hollered Stan Sullivan, 77, her irate neighbor of 30 years. "After her husband died seven years ago, Doris went into a funk. Then she brought home that baby giraffe for companionship." But the cute yard-tall creature quickly grew to 14 feet!

Bilby treated Elsie as if she were her child, taking her for walks and even driving Elsie to the park for fresh leaves and cartons of snow cones.

At first the giraffe didn't bother anyone. "It stayed in Doris's backyard all day and ate vegetation all night," said Mindy Rovers, who lives across the street from Bilby. "But eventually it started roaming the neighborhood. That's why the trees are denuded around here for a 10-block radius."

Some neighbors support Bilby. "It's not fair that they took Elsie away from Doris," said Nelda Valenzuela. "They love each other. They need each other."

Elsie is temporarily staying at a local center for wild animals and will be shipped to a refuge in Africa in several months.

If all else fails, Bilby is prepared to leave the U.S. to be with her beloved pet.

PRAY FASTER IN NEW DRIVE-THRU CHAPEL!

By MARK MILLER

SELMA, Ala. – In today's short attention-span world, people have less time to eat meals – hence, fast-food. They have less patience for long-term relationships – hence, quickie-divorces. And now, because even worshiping God takes up much-needed Sunday time, folks can do their praying quickly in a new drive-thru church!

At the Martin Luther King Church, you're in and out in five minutes, guaranteed. You stay in your car and pull up to five different stations, each station lasting one minute of the five minute service. As Pastor Edward "Speedy" Jones puts it, "You get a one-minute sermon, a one-minute Bible study class, a one-minute choir song, one-minute news update about the congregation and one minute of passing the collection plate and making a donation."

"I'm ashamed to say I'd completely stopped going to church," admits Christina Soto, 43. "Between my job and my kids and errands and just needing the time to relax, I couldn't seem to make a couple of hours of church work for me. But now I go every week. Thank you, Jesus!"

Other religions are taking note. The Trinity Catholic Church in Atlanta has recently added a drive-thru confession booth. And Temple Beth El in

MILLIONAIRE BUILDS CHURCH OF $$$

By SCOTT STEVENS

CAHILL, N.M. — For as long as he can remember, Rufus Friday worshiped money. Two years ago, the 43-year-old self-made millionaire put his money where his mouth is, and built a church dedicated to the love of money. In fact, that's what it's called: The First Church of $$$.

"Holler for a dollar!" Friday urges his parishioners. "Say 'Amen' for ten," he yells.

"Let others pray to God Almighty. We pray to the Almighty Dollar."

All of Friday's sermons consist of extolling the great wonders of money, to the exclusion of almost anything else.

"Money is a miracle," Friday told a recent congregation. "Look at it! Jesus turned wine into water. That was pretty good. But I can change this," he said, holding up a hundred dollar bill. "Into almost anything I want!"

"People go to church and say 'God, give me this,' or 'I want that.' Personally, I think God's got enough to do without figuring out what I want. I cut out the middleman — God — and go right to the source. Money. Once we have that, we don't need God to get us the microwave — we can buy it ourselves."

Friday said he was literally born under a dollar sign.

"My mother was standing outside a pawn shop, when she had me. The pawn shop had a '$$$' sign hanging over its doorway. My mother was pawning her jewelry so she could afford to have me, when out I came. If that's not a sign, I don't know what is."

Friday said he wanted to make money so badly, he didn't even finish high school.

"The first day I could drop out and get a job, I did," Friday said. He started a number of businesses that went nowhere. Then one day he was hit by a car driven by a drunk millionaire.

"He gave me a wad of cash to make the whole thing go away."

thing changed. My self-esteem went up, my worries ended, women would go out with me. O.K. – I couldn't walk for six months, but every success has a little drawback."

That's when Friday got the brilliant idea for the Church of $$$

Instead of "Amen," "cross" themselves by making a "$" sign, and begin and end each service singing the '60s hit "Money (That's What I Want)."

Ironically, one problem Friday had was getting people to put money in the collection plate.

"I had to start charging admission before they ing cash. It's almost impossible to get the congregation to part with any of what they've got. In fact, it got to the point where I had to hire guards to keep 'em from stealing what was in the plate already.

"I had to start charging

TITANIC FINALLY DOCKS!

LATE ARRIVAL RESULTS IN CONFUSION FOR PASSENGERS AND FAMILIES ALIKE

THE BIG PICTURE

By SAM STEWART

NEW YORK, [illegible] — On Wednesday, April 10, 1912, shortly after the noon hour, the RMS Titanic left England with more than 2,000 passengers and crew for its historic first transatlantic voyage to New York City.

The journey was supposed to take six days. According to White Star officials' estimates and relatives' family members, it finally arrived — 23,345 days and 17 hours late.

"It was the weirdest, smallest thing I've ever seen," said longshoreman Ted Langley of Brooklyn. And he's seen everything, he said, from ships like Titanic being struck by lightning.

"The big ship just slid into the river late one night, gliding in the moonlight. It sailed right through the span of the Verrazzano Narrows Bridge like it wasn't there and vroom! into a slip — at least, where a slip would have been 15 years ago. Now there's nothing but ruined pilings."

The ghostly sight dashed shortly after 3 a.m. Initially, there were no witnesses other than Langley and his fellow graveyard shift workers who just stood and watched.

"It was like a dream," Langley continued. "I guess they were expecting us to raise a ramp — but there was no ramp and no terminal. Hell, as far as we knew there was no ship. We figured it was just the result of bad beer or something.

"After a while the passengers just started disembarking, walking on air like there was a plank," the longshoreman said. "Porters were carrying their luggage, all of them sea-drenched like those plastic drink cups at McDonald's."

Things quickly went from merely eerie to utterly terrifying.

"Damn, all those spirits just look old," Langley said. "I don't mean they looked calm or went down to the subway. They flew in all directions, dimly lighted by the moon. The wind picked up and howled in our ears — at least, I hoped it was the wind."

The sight of the specters was far from random.

"I was walkin' up about fourteen, by a graveyard, see my

Like Simms, spectral travelers led gave their separate ways throughout the tri-state area, unmindful of their horrible deaths and the extraordinary changes in a city they once knew so well.

"This is an unnerving but not an unprecedented phenomenon," said clairvoyant Madame Mal-

If they die far away they eventually return. like moths to a flame.

"In both cases, the ghosts are trapped until they accept the reality that they have, in fact, died. Then they can move on to the next plane of existence."

Ted Langley, a Long Island, N.Y., psychic who has had numerous encounters with the spirits of the Titanic, said he was not surprised by the ship's return.

"Since the passengers disembarked in only such a few minutes for the Titanic crew to welcome the new ones, the Titanic slowly disappeared."

He told his passengers.

"Slowly but surely through the door and disappeared into big gaps at my feet," Sloan revealed, still shaken by the encounter.

"As I explained to him that he was dead, he started fading. He seemed relieved, almost confused as he said his luggage drifted off like smoke rings."

Barbara Hallin explained, "Once the ship had finished the trip, and was now free to move on, the Titanic slowly disappeared."

Bloody Mary

A CONVICTED man's flogging punishment was abruptly halted when punishers noticed his blood had formed the image of the Virgin Mary.

The holy mother's likeness was clearly visible in the streaks and pools of blood shed by Paul Ashlund, 32, of Staffordshire, England, who had been accused of stealing three apple crumb pies from a bakery window.

Royal Judge William Cullum sentenced Ashlund to the 72-lash public beating, but quickly rescinded his decision when he witnessed the holy image appear in his alleged pie-thief's blood.

"I see now that I have made an inaccurate accusation of this fine, young man," Cullum said to the disappointed crowd of 380 curious onlookers. "I realize you were all here to witness a flogging, but the Holy Mother of God is most definitely with this man.

Alien affinity

SCIENTISTS discovered the gene responsible for attracting alien abductions.

As it turns out, the rare occurrence of a double-mutated 22nd chromosome causes the body to emit a certain pheromone that only aliens can detect.

"It acts as a sonar, guiding the spaceships in," said UFOlogist Ray Sampson of the [illegible] hop this in common, so it is quite simple to predict whether a person who has not yet had an alien encounter will eventually be subjected to one."

Sampson said free screenings offered at the HCC were able to identify six persons with an inevitable abduction to look for in the future.

"At least now they know - and knowing is half the battle," Sampson said.

He suggested all babies be tested for double-mutated 22nd chromosomes so they "won't be scared when the little green men sneak up on them later in life."

Lack of federal funding shut [illegible] the HCC in 1965. No further testing [illegible] the alien-attracting pheromone has been conducted since then.

Burrito bubbles

THE ELUSIVE Chupacabra reportedly attacked and sank a ship carrying two tons of burrito fixings.

The ship, the Pico de Gallo, was in route from Mexico to Florida to deliver the goods to several well-known Mexican food chain restaurants.

"The cargo was a total loss," said Captain Eladio Hernandez. "We believe the Chupacabra ate every single shred of cheese and lettuce."

The Chupacabra is a monster believed to kill its prey by sucking the blood from their heads. Like the Loch Ness Monster and Bigfoot, he is a seldom seen and rumored to be nothing but a myth.

For that reason, the United States Coast Guard saw no signs of the impending attack, and were not able to issue a warning to the ship.

"We had no indication the Pico was a target," said one unnamed official. "For one, the Chupacabra does not normally go for such long swims and he's really not large enough to eat all that food. Plus, we would have thought he gets enough Mexican food at home."

The burrito-gobbling menace was caught after the attack, but managed to free himself from the net used to tie him up.

"It was very easy to spot him," the official said. "The men we sent out to get him just followed the bubbles coming up from the sea

Storks Deliver Babies Again!

By MICHAEL ROVIN

LANSING, Mich. — Because women spend as much time working as men, it has become more difficult for them to balance career and family — especially childbearing.

"Women just don't have time to procreate," said Dr. Jessie Barnes, a sociologist who has been studying the evolution of childbearing in society. "I don't just mean raising children. Many don't have the time or energy to become pregnant. What's more, the stress of competing in business can actually cause the female immune system to block sperm from entering the egg."

Fortunately, there is a solution.

"I came home one night from a 14-hour work-day" explained Martha Gogetem, a partner in a law firm. "I was exhausted and as I parked my BMW I wondered how I was ever going to start a family. Suddenly I [illegible] was a beautiful baby boy. I was overjoyed."

Reports of such deliveries have been coming from all over Michigan — home of one of the nation's largest populations of storks.

"I'm not surprised," Dr. Barnes went on. "Stork deliveries seem to have originated hundreds of years ago during the black plague. Mortality rates were high. If it hadn't been for these birds flying human babies high above the ground to healthier parts of the country, there may not have survived. Something in the maternal nature of these birds compelled them to act. They did the same thing during the Great Depression, bringing Dust Bowl babies to New York. So many newborns arrrived that the city converted the Stork Club to baby [illegible]."

Though stories vary about how the pair are exchanged, Dr. Fred Tweety, "They are powerful birds, and their long beaks are ideal for lifting into the [illegible] diaper."

Unfortunately, the first few bird deliveries of the 21st century were not without problems.

"My husband and I were sitting in the living room discussing our future when we heard a tumbling sound down our chimney," said Dr. Lisa Van Dyke. "A soot covered baby plopped into the fireplace. We rushed to it — quickly, because the fireplace was lit."

After a few more chimney disasters — which included babies that became stuck or trapped, squirrels and mice inside — the storks changed their tactics and began leaving them at the doorstep.

So far 100 babies have been successfully delivered, making many corporate women very happy. In fact, the experience has proved life-changing for one.

"It'll take a dirty diaper over a board meeting any day," said

MEN'S TOWN

FREEZE SPRAY!

By RICK JEFFRIES

THERE you are at a party, stuck in the corner with a bore who's describing, in excruciating detail, each and every stamp in his collection. What do you do? If you had Stinkin' Spray, all you'd have to do is freeze him — and make your escape!

Dr. Roger Eckhart, a widely respected biophysicist, has invented the handy aerosol device that contains the slithering relief which can be used for a thousand other sticky situations from which you'd like to break loose.

"Say your boss asks you a question and you don't know the answer," says Dr. Eckhart. "You simply spray him so he freezes and run to your desk to get the answer. When he comes to life again, you're standing right in front of him with the information he wanted."

The most difficult thing about Stinkin' Spray is predicting the time necessary to escape or solve your problem. The bubble has settings for 1 minute, 5 minutes, and the way up to 8 hours. If, for example, you gave yourself only a minute to find a phone you secretly borrowed from a friend and want to bring it back up in her closet before she notices, one minute should be enough — you'll still be out of the room!

Says Eckhart: "In a situation like that, you should keep out in for a couple hours and give yourself time to wash and dry the sheets."

"The 'Stinkin' person is unaware any time has passed at all — even if 5 hours has gone by. If they were in mid-sentence when you froze them, they'll finish it when they thaw."

JOE DYNAMO'S

Superhero blasts free

By RICK SIEGEL

ELLSWORTH, [redacted] — Local superhero Joe Schuster, aka [redacted] Dynamo, was cooling his jets in the Infantry Path county jail after accidentally shocking Mayor Boring. I was there for an exclusive interview when I suddenly became part of the news instead of merely reporting it.

Alarms began blaring "from the main cellblock" sounds of shouting and screaming could be heard over the sirens.

"Jailbreak!" I cried.

"Quick. Remove my gloves," Joe Dynamo insisted.

I hesitated. The police had put insulated mittens on the electrically charged superhero to keep him from breaking out of prison. Alerting his escape would be a felony.

"Let me out or people will be hurt by real criminals," he warned.

Joe had a point. I unwrapped the electrical tape binding his gloves.

"Now stand back," he said, directing me away from the steel cell door.

Joe unscrewed the bare light bulb hanging in his cell. He jammed an index finger into the socket. Waves of blue sparks enveloped Joe's hand, then his arm, then his entire body.

"Man, that feels good," he cried as ener-

"Stay with me if you can," he shouted over his shoulder. "You're about to get a (bleeping) storm!"

I took off, riding pulses of electricity toward the main cell block. I had to run to keep up.

The guards were standing in a circle with their hands held high. A dozen convicts were within the circle, protected on all sides. I later learned that the inmates had [illegible] cigarettes, lighting them, and blowing the abrasive smoke toward a guard. Staggering blindly, he had gone too near a cell. The prisoners grabbed his keys and gun, allowing them to escape.

"Thank goodness you were here, Joe!" Warden Sanderson declared when the superhero landed.

"Don't thank me, warden," Joe blushed. "I was just using my gifts. Thank the Weekly World News reporter who had the courage to free me — and," he winked, "Mayor Boring who had me arrested."

Needless to say, that arrest didn't stand. Mayor Boring declined to press charges — "It seems Mr. Dynamo is already 'charged'," he joked — and the superhero was set free.

Soon, Joe and I were finishing our interview over [redacted] Infantino's. I asked the electrified hero about his future plans.

"I love this town but it's tough to stay in a place where I'm so high profile," he lamented. "Everyone knows who I am — along with my strengths and weaknesses. Criminals would know to strike when I was sleeping or on vacation. I would never get any downtime. If I had a girlfriend they'd try to inhibit my work by threatening her.

"So I'm thinking about roaming a bit," he said. "I'll stop wherever I'm needed and lend a helping hand." He took a swig of Jolt Cola and smiled.

PALS KIDNAP BRIDE!

THEY STOP HER FROM MARRYING MR. WRONG!

By MIKE FOSTER

LONG ISLAND, N.Y. — When Lisa Elsington vanished on the eve of her wedding, authorities initially suspected another "runaway bride."

But an investigation revealed that her own bridesmaids kidnapped her to keep her from marrying Mr. Wrong! The bridesmaids were arrested after police rescued the captive from a motel room where she'd been held for 48 hours.

"The perpetrators have all confessed," announced Det. Edward Smith. "They genuinely cannot see that what they did was wrong. They kept calling the kidnapping an 'intervention.'"

The women, all lifelong friends, were "saving" their pal from marrying wealthy Austrian aristocrat Franz Habsburg, 39.

The couple met on a cruise last fall, and schoolteacher Lisa fell head-over-heels for the suave bluebood. During the ensuing courtship, he showered her with exquisitely tasteful gifts.

"Lisa thought this guy was Prince Charming, but we could see him for the snake he is," Nina Heckwood told Weekly World News in an exclusive jailhouse interview. "Yes, he has classy old-world captivated by well-bred Franz.

"Then, at [redacted] birthday party in February, the guy started talking about what excellent bone structure Lisa had and how her wide hips would make her a 'splendid breeder.'" Arlene Glodinald recalled. "It was obvious this creep saw Lisa as nothing more than good breeding stock."

That very night the couple announced their engagement.

"We tried to persuade Lisa to call the wedding off, but she wouldn't listen to reason," Nina said. "We realized we'd have to take matters into our own hands."

The bridesmaids made their move on the morning of May 7, Lisa's wedding day.

"They were supposed to come over to Miss Elsington's house and help her get dressed," said Det. Smith. "While she was getting into her gown, they put a large sack over for the nuptials, the 200 guests were sent home, while family members launched a frantic search.

"The bridesmaids feigned being upset too," said Det. Smith. "Meanwhile, they took turns 'babysitting' the victim at the motel."

Cops located the victim acting on an anonymous tip from a Peeping Tom.

During Lisa's absence, the groom suspected it was "cold

Frata told Lisa's parents angrily.

Later, when Lisa was informed about the remark, she was so angry she called off the wedding. She also refuses to press charges against her friends.

GIRL'S PET HIPPO SAVES HER FROM DROWNING!

13-foot-long gentle giant's 'loyal as Lassie'

BELLE GLADE, Fla. — When 4-year-old Amber Kaysanovs ankle got caught under a tree limb at the bottom of a lake, she almost drowned. But luckily, her pet hippopotamus Harry came to the rescue!

"Harry jumped into the water and swam right to me," Amber told Weekly World News. He picked up the tree with his teeth."

The 1,500-pound beast then used his flabby nose to nudge the girl to the surface.

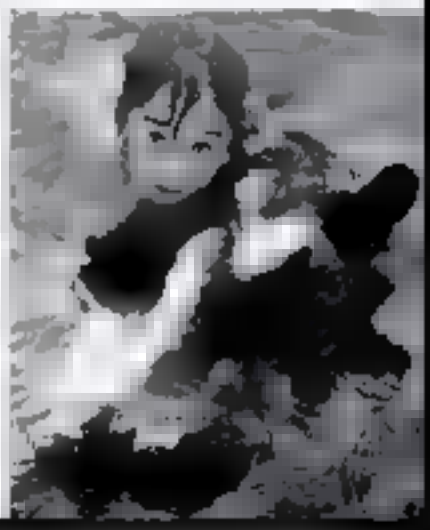
Neighbors all thought Amber's parents were crazy when they purchased the hippo. But they could no doubt. "Everyone said hippos were too dangerous," explained Amber's dad Ray, an accountant. "But Amber was in love with hippos when she saw them in a cartoon and pestered us for one."

Amber's an excellent swimmer, but when she was taking a dip around the family's home on Lake Okeechobee, a sunken tree limb [illegible] her underwater.

"I was really worried 'cause I couldn't hold my breath any longer," she recalled. "But when I saw Harry swimming toward me I knew I'd be OK."

Amber's parents are grateful to the hero hippo.

"Harry is as smart and loyal as Lassie," declared her mom Lisa.



ANTIGRAVITY BACKPACK HELPS BOY CLIMB ROPE IN GYM CLASS!

KID INVENTOR OF THE WEEK

BOSTON – Cody Hurrell was tired of being called a "nerd" because he could only climb a quarter of the way up the rope in gym class. So the brainy 13-year-old invented an antigravity device that boosts him up to the 30-foot ceiling.

"At first I was going to tell Cody that using the pack was cheating," said gym teacher Bruno Deodentsi of Hamilton Fields Academy. "But then I figured, 'The kid is using his brain instead of brawn – why discourage him?'"

Cody's compact gizmo, which fits inside a backpack, generates a powerful magnetic field that's stronger below and weaker above.

"The resulting upward magnetic force cancels out gravity," explained local physicist Jim Beattie.

Smart, skinny Cody admits he invented the gadget to impress girls. And his plan worked – he's now dating the prettiest girl in 7th grade.

"Sure, I could date a jock who used his muscles to climb," explained Cody's new girlfriend Denise. "But Cody is so smart, he'll probably grow up to be rich like Bill Gates."

EARTH STUDENT ACCEPTED

NEWPORT, R.I. — A brawny high school quarterback has become the first Earth student ever accepted to an [redacted] college, NASA insiders confirm!

Tim Hadelton is set to begin classes next fall at the prestigious [redacted] University, located on a small planet orbiting the star Sirius A — a staggering 8½ light years away.

"Tim is going under an athletic scholarship," revealed a NASA source speaking on the condition of anonymity.

"Although [redacted] highly evolved, most aliens are puny [redacted] and awkward.

"[redacted] recruiters have [redacted] hopes that Tim will lead the school team to victory in their sport Nazu Nazu which is like football played [redacted] a frisbee [redacted] razor-sharp blades that can roll your head off."

By Earth standards, Tim's 135 IQ puts him in the gifted category — but compared to fellow students [redacted] the [redacted], [redacted] a mental midget.

"When I got a phone call [redacted] me to apply I thought it was one of my friends trying to '[redacted]' me," admitted the 18-year old.

"Then I received this interactive holographic brochure from the school and I was [redacted], 'Wow, this place rocks!' "

NASA ordered Tim not to discuss the good news with [redacted] because our government's cozy relationship with extraterrestrials is highly classified. But the youth can't contain his excitement.

Miss Adventure

CONQUERS THE PRIX!

Drag queen RACES to find the right formula

By [redacted]

MONTE CARLO — The Gayest American Hero continues to [redacted] records not only in the United [redacted] but around the world. Recently returned from overseas, Kevin [redacted] 29, discussed his latest triumph exclusively with Weekly World News.

[redacted] Andrews, [redacted] professionally as Miss Adventure, had planned a quiet weekend at home in Teaneck, N.J. [redacted], his friend [redacted] Dainty "Dee Dee" Romano, 62, booked the two of them on a flight to Monaco [redacted] — without Andrews's knowledge — he had scheduled his friend to [redacted] in the [redacted] motor race.

"I can't say I was happy about it," Andrews grumbled. "I would never even have gone if Dee Dee hadn't intentionally mispronounced the name of the race."

Monaco is best known as the principality formerly ruled by Prince Rainier III and his movie-star [redacted] who died tragically in a car [redacted]

[redacted] it or not, I [redacted] going to be refereeing the course," Andrews said. "So I decided to make the best of it. In honor of Princess Grace, I decided to spend my visit dressed only in designs based on the clothes she'd worn in her films. I wore gowns from Rear Window, High Society and To Catch a Thief. I couldn't wear anything from High Noon, though. The hoop skirt wouldn't fit through the revolving doors in the casinos or, most importantly, in the transportation Dee Dee had arranged for me."

Andrews took a moment to explain how Dee [redacted] became involved in the race. [redacted] one of [redacted] oldest friends is [redacted] Dainty "Big Drag" Rickles. Since the 1940s, Rickles has managed the only drag strip in the entire country run exclusively for transvestites.

"Back then, most racers called their cast bells 'shoulder harnesses,'" he told Weekly World News. "We always called them what they were [redacted] would you even use the term drag strip?

"Our racers have [redacted] great cars," Big Drag said, then winked. "They also have hot rods, though [redacted] they rightly [redacted] those tucked away."

At 79, Rickles is still queen [redacted] the druggsters. But, as he told Dee Dee, the one thing he had never dared to have one of his custom [redacted] in [redacted] Grand Prix.

"Well, Dee Dee [redacted] about to [redacted] that happen," Andrews said. "I [redacted] have known something was up when [redacted] Dee [redacted] me the night before we left. If I had ever shifted stick fast enough to burn [redacted] I told him I [redacted] through lots of rubbers, though I had a feeling that wasn't what he meant.

"So [redacted] we were in Monaco," Andrews continued. "We were met at the track by Big Drag and his wheels, the V8-Topper. The car was pink and low slung, with an impressive tailpipe. I knew I'd enjoy being taken for a ride.

"The day before the race, Big Drag warned me about a cryptic missive that had been faxed from [redacted] like handwriting was abominable, and at first I thought it was a doctor's prescription for a deciphered it. I could have sworn it said 'Your days are numbered.' Dee Dee thought it said, 'Your lays are more bored' — which amounts to the same thing, really. Finally, Big Dreg came up with 'Your days are numbered,' which actually made sense. The signature was simply impossible to make out. The closest we got was that the letter had come from someone calling himself 'The Masked Marble.'

"Dee Dee told me to forget my fan mail and focus on test-driving the car. He warned me about the hairpin curves and I reassured him I'd packed plenty of hairpins."

With "Marbles" still rattling around in his head, Kevin took the car for a spin. Almost at once he experienced a series of mishaps that came fearfully close to claiming his life.

"The steering wheel wound up in a knot," Andrews told us. "I almost crashed to my chips before I even bet anything. Then the engine fell out with such an incredible crash I thought I'd dropped my purse. Finally, my back tires flew off and dragged my rear end 50 yards before I could stop. Thank God I had some good men working in my pit."

Clearly, The Masked Marble was trying to make good on his threat to send Miss Adventure [illegible] to eternity. Andrews received an emergency call to his cousin at the Kennedy Space Center (Weekly World News, May 9, 2006). On the day of the Grand Prix, Andrews — dressed in a navy blue gown with matching chiffon scarf — hopped in a car whose trunk was filled with space shuttle fuel.

"I'd been warned against wearing the scarf since famed dancer Isadora Duncan had been strangled when her scarf got caught in her car's wheels — but [illegible] fan in a black race car beside mine — lifted the end of my scarf and flung it to the rear. It whipped Dee Dee right in the face! It became tangled in it just as a gunshot signaled the start of the race. I floored the gas pedal — not an easy thing to do in heels — and took off.

"To my amazement, Dee was still holding my scarf. But all those years of surfboarding paid off as he zoomed right behind me. It did put a considerable strain on my neck, especially when the rocket fuel kicked in and the V-8 Topper left the ground for a few miles. As my head was pulled to one side I saw someone at that black car below shaking a fist at me and yelling, 'Curses!' I also thought I heard some car horns honking, but it turned out to be a flock of geese on their way to the Riviera."

Despite the handicap, when the dust had settled Kevin Andrews, Miss Adventure, had won the race!

"Not only had I won the Grand Prix, but thanks to the space shuttle fuel I was racing I hadn't even entered in Spain and Portugal. As an added bonus, [illegible] in the scarf stretching my neck, I also placed first in the Audrey Hepburn Look-alike Contest when I got home.

"A week after our return to Teaneck, Dee Dee came into the TV room with a package that had just been delivered. It was from my mysterious enemy, The Masked [illegible].

"After soaking it in the Jacuzzi and calling the local bomb squad, we opened the box to find a beautiful new [illegible], wrapped around a biography of Isadora Duncan.

"As near as we could figure it, the accompanying note read 'Wet Miss Again. Miss Adventure!'"

TRIED AND TRUE GAMBLING SUPERSTITIONS

By APRIL SUMMERS

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — You've heard of the familiar quirk about turning your underwear inside out, but seasoned gamblers swear by some even stranger superstitions!

Weekly World News spoke exclusively with one prominent Vegas casino owner — and you wouldn't believe what he's seen people do!

"Betting on dice is pretty rare. It's gotten harsh, much more complicated," said the man who asked to remain nameless, but swears he's seen it all.

For instance, he said, one of his regular customers insists on keeping chocolate and other sweets in his pockets at all times.

"He'll take the candy and toss it on the floor before he places a bet," the casino boss said. "He thinks the sweets will tempt the devil and he'll attack the candy and leave him alone to have good luck."

Another regular refuses to play if there is a bald man anywhere in sight because "they have zero hair," he said, "and 'zero' is a number he doesn't want anywhere near him when he's trying to win money."

Other absurd fortune-hunters do things like staying at least 10 feet from any woman in white because they're too panic-stricken their head might throw them to "blow things up" and bringing wooden dolls dressed like the dealer to poke him into submission.

"Whatever they think works," our source said. "If nothing else, at least they're funny to watch.

REALTOR FINDS HOMES FOR GHOSTS!

'THEY NEED PLACES TO LIVE TOO,' SAYS AGENT

By MARK MILLER

LANCASTER, Pa. — In a recent national survey of Americans' attitudes toward ghosts, most participants stated that although they find them fascinating, the biggest problem they have with ghosts is when the paranormal beings show up in their homes to frighten them to death.

[redacted] Realtor is convinced she has a solution — get ghosts their own houses.

Tri County Realty's Sarah Schearer has cornered a specialized niche in the real estate market — she is the [redacted] Realtor who sells homes exclusively to ghosts!

"They need places to live [redacted]ive. It just seemed [redacted]," explains Schearer. "Why overlook a potentially lucrative client base simply because [redacted] taught society the living."

Schearer was a bit apprehensive about her first ghost [redacted], whom she met through a psychic friend.

But the [redacted] turned out to be a positive one. "I think movies have given people the wrong impression of ghosts," states Schearer.

"This ghost was a very sweet woman who wasn't scary or strange at all. You'd almost think she was your own beloved aunt. I [redacted] sold [redacted] $10 million worth of homes to [redacted] the [redacted] to pay for their homes? "You'd be surprised," says Schearer.

"[redacted] that old saying, 'You [redacted] it with you'? Not true. Many of the ghosts did take their fortunes with them and [redacted] have hidden their fortunes and can easily retrieve them.

"There are some who convince their living friends and relatives to give or loan them the money [redacted] ghost [redacted] robbers, who must have the consciences [redacted], [redacted] can pass through walls, [redacted] doors and safety bones at any time of the [redacted] or night. [redacted] undetected.

"Financing was a problem initially, [redacted] developed relationships with a few banks that are not only O.K. with, but also eager to, offer home loans to ghosts."

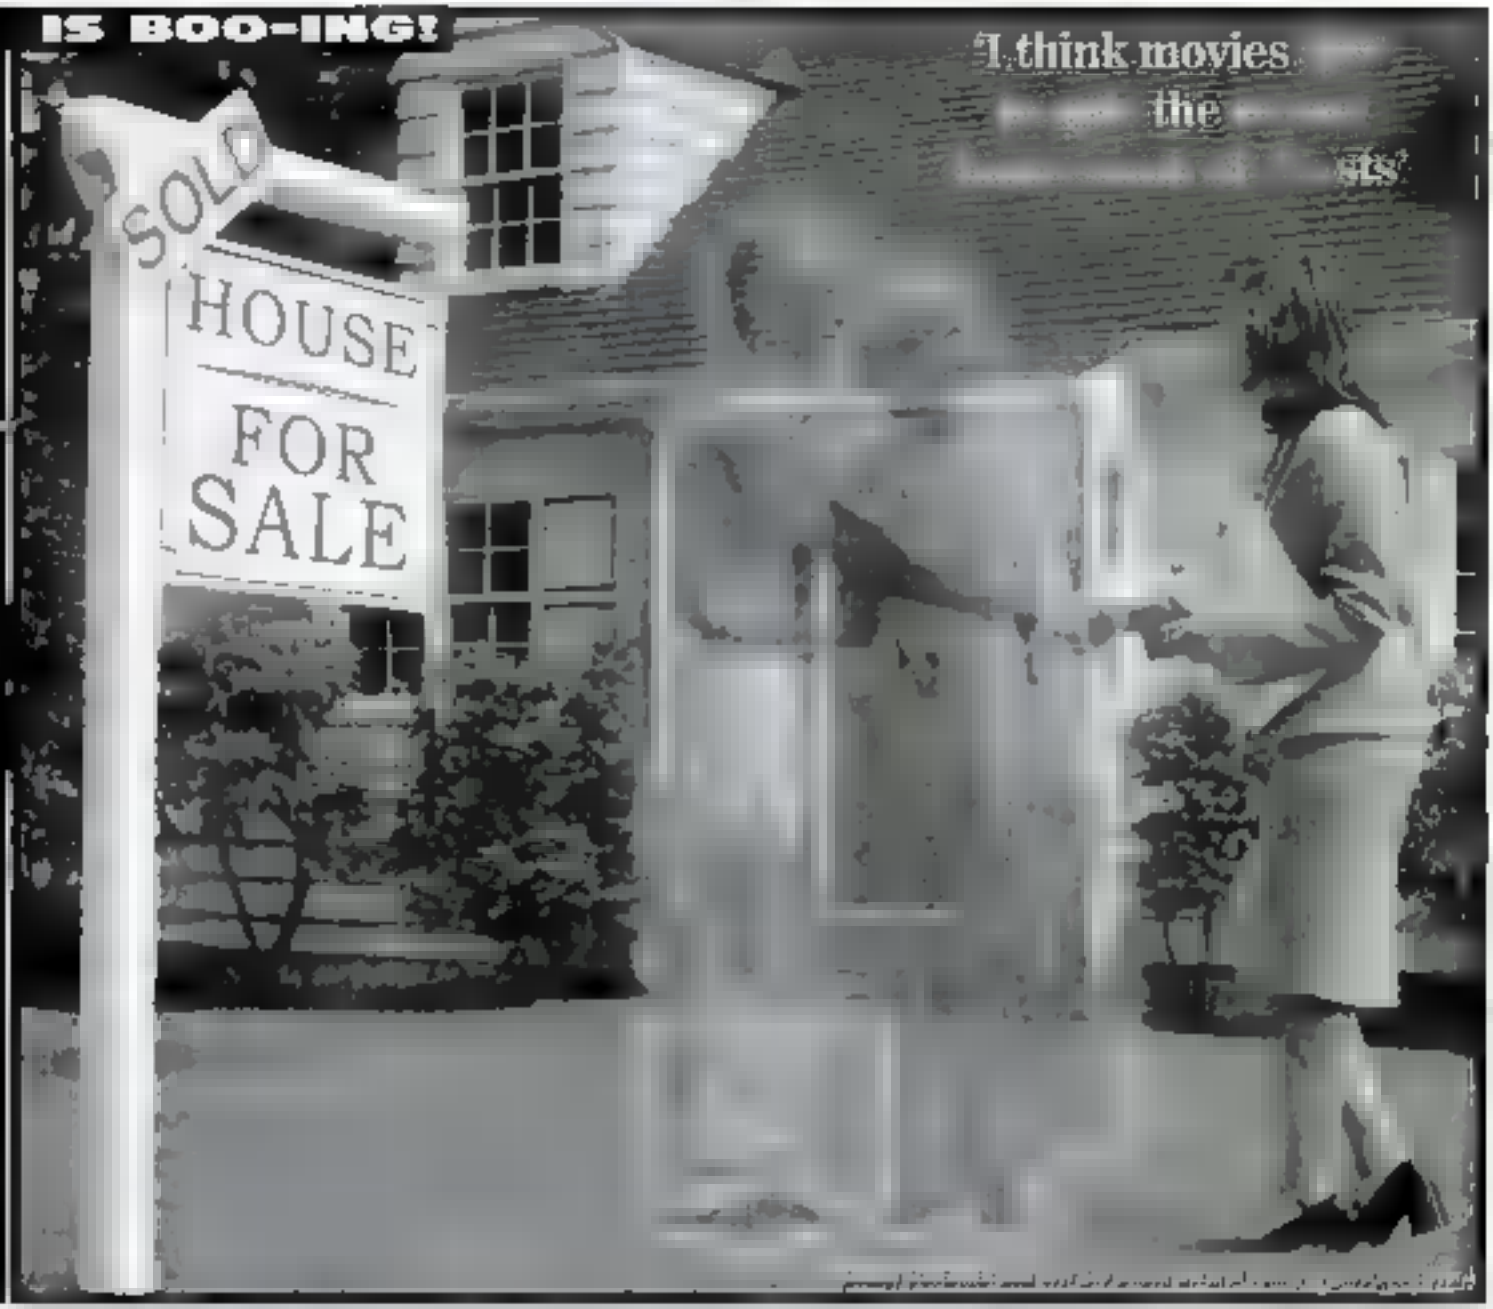
Do ghosts have any specific housing preferences? "Absolutely," responds Schearer. "Ghosts generally prefer places that are more out of the way, with a certain amount of privacy. They like big homes with plenty of character and guest rooms for visiting friends [redacted]. They like a nice view and they want to be located near their family."

Schearer's relationship with her ghost clients doesn't end once they move into their new homes.

"I help them with furnishings and decoration, get them acclimated to the neighborhood, take them through the new car purchase maze, and also help them with any mental or emotional issues they may have in the course of their transition from the world of the dead to becoming a homeowner among the living.

"I've even produced various social events for them, such as dances, hikes, mixers and [redacted]."

Success with the ghosts has opened Schearer's eyes to other nontraditional but potentially lucrative real estate client possibilities. "I'm currently in some very promising talks with zombies, werewolves and the reincarnated. I [redacted] more than [redacted]



A PENNY FOR YOUR THOUGHTS?

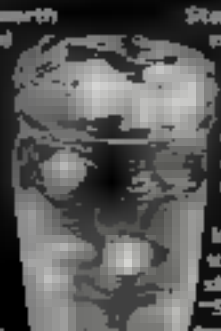
'NOT ANYMORE,' SAYS ECONOMIST

By BECKY TODD

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Top economist John Stapleton is waging a campaign to drop the saying "A penny for your thoughts." from the English language.

"It's just not correct anymore," explained Stapleton to the White House Committee on Proper Speech. "The expression was coined – if you'll excuse the pun – in penny was actually worth something. You could buy a loaf of bread, a pound of butter and a gallon of milk with it.

"These days, a penny is worth less than the energy it takes to carry it around. Even genteel maidens demand quarters



Stapleton executed a complex series of calculations, based on the number of years since the phrase first came into usage, inflation, plus rate of exchange.

He concluded that if individuals still want to use the expression, they should get it right and say: "Seven hundred and sixty thousand dollars for your thoughts."

"It's not as catchy," says the math genius, "but at least it's true. When I hear someone say: 'Penny for your thoughts,' I want to kick them because they're so financially ignorant.

"If I had it my way, I'd collect all the pennies in America and throw them into the ocean. They're worthless.

"Then again, for some

1. J.LO FOR PRESIDENT

JENNIFER LOPEZ has said she is ready to take over President Bush's job.

"I'm a total powerhouse," she said. "If you tell me, I'd like to become the first female president — that would be really cool."

The 35-year-old has already topped the music charts and conquered Hollywood, so apparently Washington seems like an obvious next step for her.

"The first thing I would do is redecorate the White House," she said. "It doesn't look too cozy."

The first man? Current hubbie Marc Anthony of course.

"I have a very good feeling and am sure that we will [illegible] part," she said.

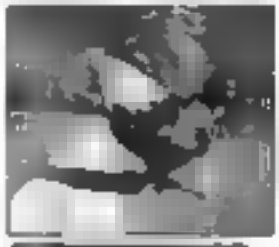
2. TOUGH COOKIE

A 9-year-old elementary school student was knocked unconscious during a cafeteria food fight. Witnesses say it was an oatmeal raisin cookie that clocked her cheek.

Jessica Moreno, the Los Angeles Prep Elementary School student who crumbled after the cookie hit her, was taken to the hospital and released after a brief period of observation.

"She'll be just fine," said Dr. Joseph Luckin. "She's just lucky it was only a cookie, and not a rock-hard pie of mystery meat or shepherd's pie."

Moreno insisted she was only an innocent bystander and did not participate in the food fight.



3. CHICKEN CROSSES ROAD AND JAYWALKS

THIS chicken had no idea crossing the road was illegal until it was too late – and he was slapped with a jaywalking ticket.

And now the feathered friend's owners, Linc and Helena Moore, are crying foul.

Deputy J. Nicholson said chickens on the road are a major problem constantly impeding traffic in the small town of Johannesburg, Calif. He didn't think simply issuing a warning to the couple would make enough of an impact to get them to control their flock.

The Moores attended court on behalf of their chicken and pleaded not

4. PEAS HELP ME!

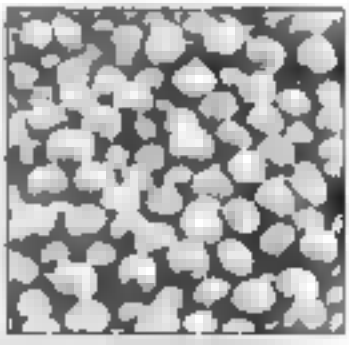
A NEW ZEALAND teen buried alive in an avalanche of peas was successfully rescued by police and paramedics.

The 17-year-old used a lighter to melt the plastic twist-ties holding a shipping carton shut at the Ashburton port.

The teen's burning desire to break into the crate was answered abruptly when the box burst open and he found himself buried in a chest-high pile of peas.

The teen had to be dug out of the vegetable mountain with a forklift.

He was sentenced to 200 hours community service and fined half the value of the peas.



5. STAR WARS — RATED X

SPECIAL REPORT FROM CANADA

GREEN GIANTS'

By [redacted]

SCREAMING EAGLE, Manitoba — Insurance [redacted] Cole Mansfield was flying to Winnipeg for a convention when his Cessna ran into trouble high above the notorious Devil's Tail mountain range.

"At first I thought it was turbulence," Mansfield told Weekly World News. "Then I remembered that a lot of planes had disappeared in the perpetually cloudy area. Suddenly, a projectile zoomed from the clouds heading right at me."

What Mansfield saw was like nothing he had ever encountered in his 15 years of flying.

"It was a giant green bean launched by a colossal [redacted] behind us. "I [redacted] out my left engine and I dove out of control into a valley. I must've blacked out because I don't remember anything after that."

When Mansfield awoke he was lying on a bed of giant spinach leaves. He was surrounded by green men and women over 100 feet tall, clad only in leafy laurels. The giants did not harm Mansfield.

"When their leader spoke I thought his voice would shatter my eardrums," [redacted] recalled. "My name is Joli," the giant said. "Welcome to Hidden Valley."

After [redacted] that [redacted] told him, [redacted] took him in the palm of his enormous hand.

He explained that they were a lost tribe of titans descended from the Greek gods. Unlike their brothers, they were docile beings who crossed the sea in search of fertile land where they could live as farmers [redacted] of warriors.

GOVT.'S NEW DRIVING TEST INSANELY TOUGH

YOU'LL NEED AN ADVANCED DEGREE TO PASS IT!

THE PROPOSED new driving test makes a college exam look like a kindergarten sign-up sheet.

By MIKE FOSTER

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In a move it says will "save tens of thousands of lives annually," the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration is proposing stiff new requirements for driver's licenses — including a written exam so mind-bendingly difficult, you'll need an advanced degree to pass it!

Capitol Hill insiders expect the proposal to be swiftly adopted by Congress, which is working toward the creation of a national driver's license.

"To put it bluntly, there are too many idiots out there driving," explained highway safety expert Mark Vingsburg, a member of the blue ribbon panel that recommended the changes.

"As a result, upwards of 41,000 people die on our nation's roads each year.

"The simple fact is that unless an exceptionally bright person is behind the wheel, an automobile is too dangerous to operate safely.

"By instituting this more rigorous exam, we could reduce support, with one lawmaker noting that the tougher test will "encourage young people to pursue higher education."

But the Association for Motorists' Rights opposes the change, charging a government conspiracy.

"Officials want citizens to take the exam and fail again and again — paying a fee each time," claimed a spokesman. "It's a money-making scam."

ARE YOU SMART ENOUGH TO DRIVE?

HERE are some sample questions from the new driver's license exams (answers at bottom):

   C) 61.23 meters
   D) 70 meters

2. What year was automatic windshield wiper intermittent as standard equipment?

   A) Lower pitch and shorter wavelength
   B) Lower pitch and longer wavelength
   C) Higher pitch and shorter wavelength
   D) Higher pitch and longer wavelength

4. What was the MPG rating of a Ford Custom V8 convertible in 1949?

6 NEW CURSE WORDS IT'S O.K. TO SAY

By ROEL FLEMING

LOS ANGELES — You can't say @#$% today. That's the &*@#$% problem. Everybody's trying to be politically correct. No one wants to offend anyone . . . well, except for those jerks who flip you off on the freeway.

In the United States, we have [redacted] curse words — using dictionaries full of them — but most of us are too fearful to use them. As psychologist Dr. Herman Fugmunkler noted, "It's dangerous to say &*@#! off to a truck driver. Five days in intensive care convinced me of that."

But help is on the way. Fugmunkler did extensive research for his latest book, Cuss Your Head Off, and came up with six new curse words it's O.K. to shout from the rooftops, because no one has ever heard them before. They're nasty, vile and disgusting. Learn 'em and use 'em. You'll let off

WORLD NEWS SYNDICATE

The six new curse words are pfnark, snog, lusq, chuz, jizzlewax and zighumple. They can be used alone or combined to form compound curses, when you're mad or when you're happy, as adjectives, verbs, nouns and, especially, [redacted]. Phraction A.

Speaking of the word "pfnark," Fugmunkler traces its derivation to the sleepy coal-mining [redacted] of Wimsley, Wyo. [redacted] Dalwood Comstock fell [redacted], a murky [redacted] screamed, [redacted] pfnark! Somebody [redacted] me!"

Comstock was probably trying to say "Holy &*@#," but due to his speech impediment and a mouthful of coal, it came out "pfnark."

Fugmunkler gives examples of how the word can be used. "Pfnark off, pigeon head!" "Go pfnark yourself!" and, "You're a pfnarfin' loser!"

The next word in Fugmunkler's book is "snog," which sounds a mite dirty because it resembles [redacted]. It's not. It's a real nice word. Fugmunkler says it's the most polite curse word in the world, according to Fugmunkler. "If you scold someone in an irritated voice by saying, 'Don't be such a snog,' the individual will cringe with embarrassment, for no one wants to be called a 'snog.' It sounds disgusting."

Colorful variations of the word include [redacted], "snog off" and [redacted], as in "Snoggle this, you bastard." And if you want to hit someone with a double whammy, you can say, "Snoggle this, you pfnarfin' bastard!" Of course, most people understand the word "bastard," so be prepared to put up your dukes or run like hell. And if you choose the latter, you can always get the last word in by shouting, "Kiss my pfnarfin' snog!"

"Lusq" (pronounced look) was first heard by Fugmunkler in a sleazy El Paso, Texas, bar. "This drunken cowboy walked in and said, 'What lily-livered lusq stole my woman?' When no one [redacted]."

This brings us to the next word: Chuz. It can be used to describe a man or a woman, and it's quite unflattering. "Picture a bowl of clumped kitty litter, chunky spoiled milk and rotten chopped liver, and that's [redacted] 'chuz' looks like," Fugmunkler explained. "So to call someone a 'chuzbucket' or a 'chuzball' is the ultimate insult."

The penultimate word on the [redacted] is "jizzlewax." It conveys utter angst, as in "I'm totally jizzlewaxed. I'd squash my head in a vice if I had one!" Or another way of [redacted], "I'm totally &*@#ed up," without getting your mouth washed out with soap.

Last on the list, is "zighumple," which actually is more fun to do than to say, because when you're "getting a zighumple," you're partying, baby.

So there you have it, six new curse words you can say wherever

WOMAN READS CLOUD FORMATIONS TO SEE THE FUTURE

By DEBBIE FANATIA

OASIS, N.C. — Some psychics read tea leaves or tarot cards. Some just touch a person and can see into their souls. But Glenda Berkowitz's favorite pastime as a child was lying in a field watching the puffy cumulous clouds roll by. To her, it was like watching a movie that hadn't been made yet, projected on an infinitely big blue screen, showing her what the future had in store.

"I remember the first time I realized the formations were more than illusions of childhood fantasy," said Berkowitz. "My best friend and I were lying in her daddy's pasture after a game of tag with the goats, and Cindy pointed out a cloud she thought looked like an elephant.

"Out of my mouth popped the revelation that it was her first husband. She thought I was making fun of her, but I swear, the man she married looked just like that cloud. He was grossly overweight and had the biggest nose and ears on the planet. And we won't even talk about how his feet and toenails resembled an elephant's. I knew the minute I laid eyes on him she'd marry him."

Parapsychologists have studied Glenda's ability and are impressed by her accuracy. They can't explain how she gets the answer, and sees things basically the way they do. They think her abilities are a result of her relative isolation as a child raised on a farm, and her willingness to allow nature to show her how the world works.

"In the right conditions, her accuracy is much higher than, say, a palm reader in a candlelit hovel," said Peter Overburn, head researcher at Naropa University in Boulder, Colo.

Parapsychologists have studied Glenda's ability and are impressed by her accuracy

Berkowitz admits to being sensitive to the environment and the interdependence of humans to their surroundings. "I think everybody could probably open themselves up if they could find a quiet spot anymore.

"If I give a reading in a backyard with noises from planes and traffic and stereos blaring, my predictions are a little off. For instance, I gave a reading from the roof of a building in Detroit once, and I told the guy his dog would run off or get lost while his son was at camp. Turns out his greyhound tracks all day while their son was at camp and lost everything they had. I do much better in places like Wyoming or Montana. It's like watching epics unfold there."

Amazingly enough, while scientists believe in her abilities, her fellow psychics are skeptical. "Tea leaves, palms, the pulse of someone's blood through their veins, those are stable and proven methods. You toss out a deck of tarot or a batch of tea leaves, they stay put and don't change until you scoop them up and start all over.

IN WEST VIRGINIA CAVE!

By BILL CREIGHTON / Weekly World News

Back in the spring of 1982, one of the most amazing discoveries of all time was made in a West Virginia cave. A group of scientists found a never-before-seen creature that appeared to be half-bat — and half-human!

The strange creature had enormous amber eyes that enabled him to see in the dark and oversized ears that worked like radar.

The ongoing saga of the Bat Boy fascinated and baffled scientists all over the world. Over the years, the creature has escaped captivity at least three times. It last slipped away back in 1987 — and has not been seen since.

Dr. Ken Dillon was the first man to capture the strange cave dweller. He said the boy communicated with high-pitched squeaks and squeals and refused to eat anything but flying insects that he caught himself.

"I hardly know what to make of it," said Dr. Dillon in a 1982 interview. "The boy appears to be human but he is unlike any other human I've ever seen. His eyes are twice as big as they should be and his ears are like satellite dishes. This boy clearly belongs to a race of people who live miles beneath the Earth's surface.

"And it is my guess that they evolved bat-like features and abilities to enable them to survive in total darkness.

"There's no telling how many of these creatures are down there," he added. "This particular boy was all alone but he almost certainly strayed from a much larger tribe or pack."

Dr. Dillon and seven colleagues found the so-called bat boy during a study of subterranean life in a previously uncharted cave east of Sewers Rocks in the Shenandoah Mountains. The scientist said he and his team were approximately two miles underground when they heard the 2-foot, 19-pound creature squealing frantically in an apparent plea for help.

"We turned our lights in the direction of the cries and found the boy with his bare foot wedged in the crack between two rocks," said the expert.

"To tell you the truth, I thought I was seeing things.

"The last thing I expected to find at that great depth was another human being, much less one that looks like he came from outer space." Dr. Dillon said he freed the boy's foot and lifted him up for a closer look.

The child appeared to be stunned at first — then lashed out like an animal caught in a trap.

"I couldn't believe how strong he was," continued the expert. "He scratched and clawed and fought like crazy.

"We finally subdued him with a tranquilizer injection.

"Then we brought him to the surface and took him to a private hospital for testing and observation."

Dr. Ken Dillon

Dr. Dillon said the Bat Boy appeared to be 3 or 4 years old and adapted to life in captivity quicker than expected.

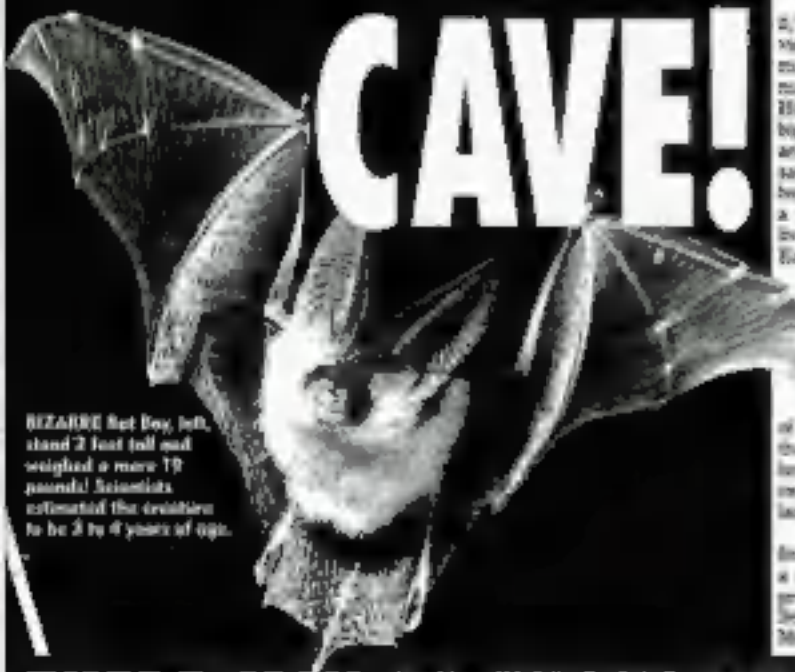
He began gaining weight when scientists stopped giving him human foods — and began to flood his room with bugs.

"We get them from laboratories involved in insect research and release them into the room by the millions," said Dr. Dillon.

"He managed to consume his own weight in bugs every single day by locating their position with his radar-like ears and catching them with his mouth and hands.

"Needless to say, he is extremely active. When it's time to feed he moves like lightning."

Dr. Dillon has always refused to pinpoint the location of the cave where the boy was found.



BIZARRE Bat Boy, left, stood 2 feet tall and weighed a mere 19 pounds! Scientists estimated the creature to be 3 to 4 years of age.
